

List of examples of relevant fields of study for the ECB Scholarship for Women

- Economics (international economics, econometrics and mathematical economics, economics for development, environmental economics, political economy, international affairs, quantitative finance, etc.)
- Statistics (applied statistics, statistics and data science, biostatistics, etc.)
- Engineering (facility management, electrical engineering, mechanical engineering, architecture, civil engineering, heating, ventilation, air-conditioning and sanitary (HVACS) engineering, property management, safety engineering, security engineering, logistics, electronic engineering, environmental engineering, sustainable energy technology, quality and safety engineering, transportation systems, etc.)
- Computing (information and communication technologies, computer science, information systems, information and communication management, business informatics, information security, robotics and space engineering, bioinformatics, etc.)

Your master's degree must have a significant focus on economics, statistics, computing or engineering to be considered eligible for the scholarship. For more complex cases, it is the panel of experts who will assess the information provided in the application and arrive at a final decision on your eligibility.